8+2=10

One - third of all our food - fruits and vegetables would not exist without pollinators visiting flowers. But honeybees, the primary species that fertilizes food - producing plants, have suffered dramatic decline in recent years, mostly from afflictions caused by humans.

Domestic honeybees have lost as many as one - third of their hives and their wild cousins have become virtually extinct in many places around the world.

A variety of troubles threaten the pollinators : endless waves of development destroy nesting and feeding grounds; pesticides kill them along with other beneficial insects.

Even while they are cultivated in apiaries they get exposed to pests if adequate care is not taken by the bee keepers.

If farmers, bee keepers, pesticide applicators, scientists and common people do not come together to save the bees - we would soon lose much of our food resource.
