Note : All questions are compulsory

1. Read the following passage and answer to the questions that follow :

Values are a set of principles or standards of behaviour. Values and education, both complement each other. Education without value-inculcation is incomplete and values without being brought into practice have no meaning. Values are the soul of education. Values cannot be taught and education need not be imparted only in educational institutions. There are many great personalities of the world who did not get formal education, but they inculcated great values. They didn't have formal degrees, but many people have acquired degrees on them. Kalidasa and William Shakespeare were not university wits, but today every university is paying homage to them. Wellington, Napoleon, Aristotle and Winston Churchill were not brilliant students but they achieved greatness from experiences of life. Family, society, playmates, books, magazines, radio, T.V., Internet, travelling, conversation with people of different backgrounds, cultures, religions and nations can be educational so any experience that makes an impact on us is educational.

Adult education can be called a kind of social education. In India, the illiterate people face many handicaps in their daily lives. They are not aware of the many government programmes and facilities brought out from time to time for their upliftment. To remove adult illiteracy, the government implemented the National Literacy Mission. Rural programmes such as health, education, family planning etc. are being telecasted on the T.V. And radio to bring the illiterate into the mainstream. Students are engaging in social work and spending their long holidays fruitfully for removing illiteracy through adult education.
